Bio: Barry Dicker is currently founder and President of Decent Energy, Inc. and a CESAS (Consortium for Environmental Stewardship and Sustainability) speaker. He brings a blend of local market conditions in the efficiency and renewable energy industries along with a national commercial and policy context. Mr. Dicker's renewable energy involvement has extended for over a decade ranging from counseling in areas of technology commercialization to installation of pilot systems, to renewable energy project development. As a former transactional business lawyer, he brings additional perspectives around how the evolving path to renewables/grid integration relates to past patterns of technology and economic development. Mr. Dicker is a graduate of Hamilton College and Harvard Law School.
